Due to the success of FIFA's football simulation to date, the graphics and physics engine of FIFA has been developed and tuned for these high-intensity, real-world action-based moments and videos. With FIFA's highly realistic and immersive graphics, many footballers will feel as though they have been dropped into a real-world stadium to play. The live athlete motion capture suits, worn by the footballers in the match play, record the precise movements made by the players. Once the recorded data is input into the game, FIFA 22's HyperMotion technology can realistically reproduce each movement of the player on the pitch. For example, when a player makes a tackle on the ball or holds the ball up over his head to play in a one-on-one situation, the on-screen player will move in an identical manner to their real-life counterpart. Up until now, EA Sports has had the player models in the game recreated using the same animation system that it had used since FIFA 13. FIFA 22 will be using the same in-house animation system as FIFA 16, in an attempt to deliver the most realistic, fluid, high-energy football game yet. Unlike FIFA 17, when an attacker dribbles with the ball at a slower pace, FIFA 22 can now run this animation system at a faster pace. This allows the game to accurately recreate the fast-paced attacking situations that occur in real-life football matches. This also makes attacking moves more realistic and fluid. The in-game player animations, which are key to the new simulation, have been greatly improved. At higher speeds, the player can now move in quick jabs, sudden movement and full sprints. "We've listened to fans and commentators, and made a big change to our in-game player animations, so now you can see players in real-life, truly move as you'd expect them to. Now with the HyperMotion technology, the player can cover more ground faster, and can attack in an even more realistic fashion. We've also introduced the new sprinting animation, which really makes the game feel more authentic." - Karl-Johan MalMBERG, Head of FIFA Game Development Furthermore, Zlatan Ibrahimovic's swipe animation is now more realistic, and immediately accurate. And the goal celebrations can also be performed in the same unique, hyper-realistic way, as the

FIFA is an annual soccer video game series produced by EA Canada with the assistance of EA Sports, PES, Konami and others. It is the most successful soccer video game franchise of all time, having sold more than 200 million units worldwide since its initial release in August 1993. Who is Electronic Arts? EA is a worldwide leader in interactive entertainment. The company delivers games, content and online services for Internet-connected consoles, personal computers, wireless devices and social networking services. EA

has more than 100 million registered players and reach is diversified across Internet-connected consoles, personal computers, wireless devices and social networking services. EA has studios in Canada, Denmark, Japan, Ireland, the UK, the USA, Australia, France, Germany, Italy and Spain. More information about EA is available at www.ea.com. What is FIFA history? The first FIFA was released in August 1993 and began EA's journey to become the number one soccer series. The player-to-player action involved in the FIFA series has evolved as the game has evolved, with the turning point for FIFA being the introduction of SEGA PES on the Genesis console and the appearance of the PC version of FIFA on Windows 95. How do I play FIFA? FIFA is a soccer game in which players take control of their very own team of virtual soccer players and attempt to score as many goals as possible against an opposing team. The player-to-player action involves battling your opponents for possession of the ball. To score, you must pass the ball through your opponents' penalty area (shield) by dribbling the ball into the opposing goalkeeper's side (goal). Individual games also involve taking charge of a fast-paced match, where you are given 5 minutes to score a goal, defend against the opposition and, most importantly, stop all of the other teams' progress down the field (scoring against you is not a goal). What hardware and software is required to play? Playing FIFA requires a fully-configured computer with a Microsoft Windows XP operating system and a minimum of a 2 GHz processor, 256 MB RAM, OpenGL 2.0 capable graphics card,
